A VCO user was upset because the CA was typing too fast and using question marks. The CA was unable to understand the voice party.

This was an NE/NL call so the CA requested a supervisor to assist with the call. The supervisor attempted to explain the call procedures regarding NE/NL, but the caller was still upset. The proper procedures were explained to the Customer including that the Customer needs to ask the voice party to repeat what they had said during an NE/NL call as the relay remains completely invisible.

Customer reported that long distance calls had been charged to his number, which appeared on his telephone bill. He stated he does not have a long distance carrier and did not make any long distance calls. The Customer stated that a CA used his long distance "illegally".

Customer Service apologized and informed the Customer that the matter would be investigated. Customer Service asked him to fax or mail a copy of his phone bills. He sent a copy of his bills to the Customer Service Department. A check of his Customer Profile revealed that he had requested to have his long distance carrier removed from his profile, but that he had not requested a long distance block. The CA was not at error. His long distance carrier was re-entered into the profile with restrictions on long distance calls as requested. The Customer was given a credit of 23 cents.
